

Every dawn ushers us into the Light of a new Day, after a night of dreams. We look forward for better things to come, but often are disappointed. Different people cope up with their struggles, and many theories of survival abound around us. What fits one may not be of use to others. So, it is best to leave these theories alone, and do what you have done best so far. Have Hope.

Hope is something intangible, but it is felt and shared by most people, and that has been given to us to survive in insurmountable situations

Some do not like the idea of a God who saves. Yet most of the humans before us have savored the healthy results by believing in a Superior Being, who has strength which we do not possess, and further we do not have answers to our questions of our existence, and that of the many things around us which astonish us, even if with every age, wise men have tried to give us their ideas. Now a days, we see people abandoning the ideas of their parents and grand parents and "trust" the scientists, as they come out with their theories and hypotheses. May be it keeps their spirits up. Perhaps they may be right as far as their own lives go. There are others who are not stirred from their slumber, on hearing these wonderful theories, which encourage many to take on this life as it comes

So, a new day has dawned, and it is the first day of January of a new Year. I have finished eighty one and some new babies are just born, and have a long way ahead of them. We have to hold hands, and walk along the beaten path, till the cross roads come and take us in different directions, But memories of those we leave behind us will still guide each one of us on our way.

All the best to each and every one of you.
